

As our creeks meander their way down to the sea, they sometimes move south, sometimes east, and sometimes west. Using those cardinal points to describe direction on a creek can be deceiving. Commonly the terms downstream and upstream are used instead. The terms right bank and left bank (facing downstream, of course) are also commonly used.

Please use those terms - upstream, downstream, right bank and left bank – when describing the location of sightings.